To develop the listening, speaking, reading and writing skills, which are also called 'communication skills', the teacher requires a methodology different from the traditional lecture method in which the teacher is the centre of the class and dominates the session. The new methodology is learner-centred and requires active participation from the students in classroom activities. The teacher should create conditions in the classroom so as to activate the innate learning capability of learners so that learning takes place spontaneously. Role play, oral fluency exercises help simulate the real life conditions and encourage practice in the use of language. Exposure to the language is a precondition to achieve this objective.

Questions :

(a) What is traditional method of learning?

*

- (b) What is learner-centered method of teaching?
- (c) What are communication skills?
- (d) What are the two activities mentioned that encourage practice in the use of English?
- (e) Pick the word from the passage that would mean 'existing hiddenly'.
