A college library is useful in many ways. Its chief function is to provide all kinds of reading material. These could be used for study, recreation or reference. Available materials provide students the opportunity not only to gain academic knowledge but also to use this knowledge for practical applications. This can be done either by discovering isolated facts or by searching in an organized way.

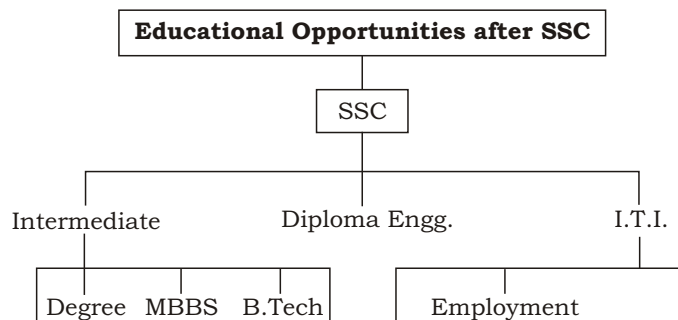

The library also trains students in the formation of personal opinion and develops in them the ability to ask questions, rather than accept statements at their face value. This can be achieved by careful consideration of available information. By providing voluntary service in their college libraries, students develop in themselves a sense of service and respectability. This then becomes a valuable experience for them in their lives ahead.

Finally, the experience of making optimum use of their college libraries prepares the students to do the same with public libraries too, after they leave college.

Today people are more aware of exercising than they were a few years ago. And when we think of exercises, running as an exercise comes to our mind. Running is popular among all age groups. It has become popular because it keeps you fit. By fitness, I mean, it helps people reduce their weight, develop muscles, and improve mental and physical performance.

Firstly, running helps to reduce weight. A person weighting 65 kg burns a lot of calories per mile running. The calorie consumption is relatively independent of pace but does depend on body weight. A heavier person will burn more calories running. A runner must burn 3,500 calories to lose 40 grams of fat. A 65 kg person who runs or walks fast for a mile a day 300 days a year will burn 30,000 extra calories in a year. A heavier person will burn even more calories. If runners do not increase their caloric intake, running a daily mile translates into losing a little under 4 and a half in a year. A runner already at a healthy weight maintains good health without gaining weight. When a person thus is conscious of reducing weight, in a way running also encourages taking a healthy diet.

Will running build muscle? The short answer is yes, of course it can, particularly if those with bad muscle tone. It improves muscle tone and increases the strength of the muscles. The use of weights while running is helpful to build strong muscles.

(b) What are the benefits of running?
(c) How much fat is lost when a runner burns 3,500 calories by running?
