A major social factor affecting sleep in adults is work. Longer work hours are associated with shorter sleep and increased risk of accident and injury. Accident risk increases with increased time on the job. The risk of accident during the twelfth hour of work is more than double the risk in the first hour. To decrease this risk, short workplace naps should be permitted for ten to thirty minutes, which can improve alertness and performance.

Questions :

- (a) How is work leading to shorter sleep?
- (b) How are longer work hours related to accident?
- (c) What is the meaning of 'nap'?
- (d) When are accidents more likely to happen?
- (e) What is the benefit of a short nap at workplace?
