In India, as perhaps in many other countries of the world, trees have been held in veneration since ancient times. Our rishis of yore retired to forests to meditate and to do penance amidst trees and "far from the madding crowd." Our forebears loved trees and forests so much so that they even deified and worshipped them as abodes of Vrikshadevata and Vanadevata. Many of them were not cut without good reason. In ancient India, groves of trees and flower gardens were reared with loving care.

In ancient Sanskrit literature, there are many references to young maidens kicking the Ashoka tree to make it flower. But in fact, the kick can be administered by anyone. The method seems to work, though nobody really knows why? Some say the kick interrupts the flow of water upwards, triggering a defence mechanism which causes the tree to flower. In Western countries, people beat their walnut trees to encourage them to bear fruit. It is believed that a good beating ensures a good crop of walnuts. Like the Ashoka, the walnut too is a tall tree. Perhaps all tall trees benefit from a sound beating occasionally. In parts of Uttar Pradesh, they resort to another stratagem to get mango trees to flower. If a tree has not given fruit in a particular year, the owner, accompanied by three or four friends, walks menacingly towards it with an axe and loudly announces his intention of cutting down the tree. His friends persuade him not to do so. When he has gone they beat the tree for not giving fruit and advise it to give plenty of fruit the next time if it wants to live. The method is said to give good results.

- (ii) Who are referred to as Vrikshadevata and Vanadevata in the passage?

- (vi) What is the similarity between Ashoka and Wallnut trees?
- (vii) Do you believe that trees can understand human behaviour and actions?
- (viii) Pick the word from the passage that would mean : suggesting the presence of danger, a threatening atmosphere.

(b) Read the following poem and answer the questions :

Two roads diverged in a yellow wood,
And sorry I could not travel both
And be one traveler, long I stood,
And looked down one as far as I could
To where it bent in the undergrowth;

Then took the other, as just as fair,
And having perhaps the better claim
Because it was grassy and wanted wear,
Though as for that the passing there,

Had worn them really about the same,
And both that morning equally lay,
In leaves no step had trodden black.
Oh, I kept the first for another day!
Yet knowing how way leads on to way

I doubted if I should ever come back.

I shall be telling this with a sigh,
Somewhere ages and ages hence:

Two roads diverged in a wood,
And I took the one less travelled by,
And that has made all the difference.

- (i) Where are the two roads diverged?
- (ii) Why was the poet in a confused state?
- (iii) Which road did the poet finally select to travel?
- (iv) What is the message of the poem?
